

The Burlington and the West

More than a century ago a handful of men, impelled by the lure of fresh acres and the urge that builds empires, began a job.

Setting their faces westward they trekked the weary miles in covered wagons. They wrought with rifle, ax and plow and in the end their work was finished. The West was won.

It was into this self-same wilderness that the Burlington set its course in the early 50's. In those pioneering days men of courage and vision recognized the need of better transportation westward and set out to make their dream come true. Twelve miles of strap rail, one tea-kettle engine, and worlds of faith in America was the physical and spiritual inventory of the Burlington at that time.

The passing of a few decades has wrought its miracle and the Burlington has played an important role in the transformation of the West from wilderness to a productive, agricultural and industrial empire.

It is a far cry, indeed, from the Burlington which began in 1850 to the Burlington of today, but the spirit of faith and achievement has prevailed through the years—the same objective which united Burlington workers during the days of the pioneer, unites more than 30,000 Burlington workers today.

We take pride in the Burlington's growth to its present position as one of the country's major railroads.
