

*LuncheonTHE DUDE RANCH - A typically American Institution

Out where the western plateaus billow upward to meet the snow-capped ramparts of the Rockies is the dude ranch country—as majestic, as rugged, and almost as primitive as when white man first beheld it.

Here is a different world—a world of horseflesh and leather, of boots and 10-gallon hats, of 50-mile vistas and mile-high mountains. Here is nature unspoiled and unspoilable. Here the dude and guest ranch thrives.

What is there to do on a dude ranch? Everyone has his favorite horse; gentle mounts for children and those who never straddled a saddle; fleet, spirited mounts for those who love to gallop over the prairie . . . all sure-footed for climbing mountain trails or fording swift streams. If you are a devotee of Isaac Walton, bait your hook and thrill to a lively tussle with a speckled mountain trout in an ice-cold stream. If you like to hike, there are countless seldom-used trails that lead through shaded valleys, alongside gem-like lakes, up to lofty heights where one can view nature at its best. Those who crave action can take a hand at wrangling horses, putting up hay, handling a branding iron, or roping a steer. Or, you can enjoy luxurious loafing beneath great trees or on a shady cabin porch; plunge into a cool pool; seek out a restful corner for an hour with your favorite book or an afternoon doze.

Here you'll find the keen mountain air . . . clear and exhilarating . . . a perfect antidote for backward appetites and jaded nerves. Worries and cares are forgotten; every day brings a new and utterly different experience.

Yes, the dude ranch is a typically American institution. The ranch regions in Wyoming, Montana and Colorado are served by fine Burlington air-conditioned trains.
