The Pueblo Indians create many fine objects of their native craft, such as, pottery, drums, baskets, dolls, and other interesting items.

The making of these items is important to the Pueblo people, for they are needed in their trading with other Indians and white traders for the things they use to carry on their way of life.

The scene shown on the cover of this menu is a Pueblo market at Oraibi in the Hopiland of Arizona. Reproduction is from a painting by John Hauser.
